"Open In Case of Apocalypse"

There are rumors going around that Meteors/Asteroids will strike earth in September of 2015, the same month as the last blood moon (that is a red eclipse) that will appear in the sky over Israel. By the way, God does not need an eclipse to turn the moon red, so this blood moon might pass without incident. On the other hand if God is just being obvious who can stop him? We would then need be waiting for another entirely different more unnatural event if the anti-christ does not call himself God on the temple mount this coming September. God is unpredictable. Will the sun also not give its light in September, the whole world returning as if to an ancient darkness? Reports of dreams and visions of tidal waves from mostly the Pentecostal sector it seems, a sect not given to predicting end-time prophecy with great accuracy. Lots of failure there. Ephraim Rodriguez dreamt that a doomsday 2.5-mile wide asteroid would hit near Puerto Rico, producing a wave high enough and fast enough to wipe out the East Coast of the U.S. I'm not saying this is all true and it will definitely happen. If it does NOT happen, Ephraim Rodriguez is a false prophet that should be avoided at all costs; consider him anathema. If he has already made false predictions, do not concern yourself with his tales of tidal-waves. Look elsewhere for meteor information. Abandon his teachings altogether. The deaths of billions, oh, if only NASA would say something to warn everybody (because they are already aware it is coming?) The rich-elite are also said to be stuffing Rice Krispies and mini-marshmallows into their waterproof underground submarine bunkers. And they will only warn people when the object in the sky is close enough so that we have enough time and generous warning to move three feet to the left. Well, you know, the elite, they hate all of us because we are what they call, "useless eaters," and they expect to inherit a world full of dead fish and rotting corpses - for whatever strange reason, and, oh yes, they have stored away precious seeds in places near and afar to plant in poisoned, radiated soil or something like that. Looks like (well, scripturally speaking) God is going to let some participants of the New World Order go on living at least until the final day, piling up their sins for judgment, because, well, they just can't seem to stop doing evil. Even Hitler survived a suitcase full of dynamite. If God let Hitler survive, the New World Order can also still be around in time to toss their idols into caves and utter strange cryptic messages to the mountains when they see an ancient prophet who hung on a cross appear riding a white horse with millions of angels and saints behind him, the Son of God whose great faith in His Father can help mankind survive nuclear explosions. Such a Messiah will avenge the deaths of the millions of Christians imprisoned, burnt, beheaded, poisoned, and raped. What ever will he do to those who murdered his followers? Most likely it is not going to be pretty.

Is there some slight chance a man can survive a tidal wave? I don't see very many people offering up very many solutions. There is talk of investing in unsinkable boats (whatever those might look like); there may even exist good designs on the Internet one could look into and construct all on your own. There's talk of moving to safer locations than the ones whereupon destruction is predicted to befall. There's also talk that such catastrophic events are NOT the end of the world, that there's more that happens afterwards, a continuance of tribulations, numerous sequels as it were, which is scripturally sound. Even if one survives, what guarantee is there that the New World Order won't grab you and try to force you to accept the mark of the beast? And who says some New World Order bunkers won't meet with violent life-threatening earthquakes? What of destruction to Nuclear Power Plants, methane-fracking stations, gas stations, etc. Radiation, oil spills, fracking stations ruined and bleeding methane and flammable chemicals, pollution like we've never seen it before, all the fishies in the seas dying - as was prophesied. When you come out of your NWO bunker it will indeed be a strange new world. If you're not brave enough to put a bullet in your own head, enjoy the hospitality of the works of your very own hands. If you had told people where they could go to be safe, you wouldn't be dealing with that awful stench. And there is so much more to come. You see, most of what happens in the Book of the Revelation happens to unbelievers.

Is there a slight chance of surviving a tidal-wave, maybe, but it's not guaranteed. It's an idea I don't hear anyone discussing so I thought I'd mention it. And you might be able to set it up on short notice too, if you're lucky enough. And, it might even save you if you are clever about it (and don't forget to pray without ceasing). You might be able to build your own rise-able submarine safe-pod from something you use and recycle every day - empty durable plastic bottles. Or a plastic-bottle-floatation-suit that wraps around your torso. You would indeed look foolish walking around all the time in your neighborhood waiting for a tsunami to whisk you away on the most terrifying surfing ride of your life, so I don't recommend this tactic; being put away in a nut-house, that would be counter-productive to the task at hand, you want to be a free man if you want to take this journey. Don't forget the football or motorcycle helmet to protect your head. You may not survive. And maybe you shouldn't. The mark of the beast may be waiting for you on the surface at the first sign of dawn. Oil and fire may be waiting for you top-side. Dead bodies floating all around you and disease and the smell of death in the air. But remember, two grinding bread, two sleeping in a bed, two standing in a field, three will be taken, three will be left. This means there will be some Christians without the mark of the beast left alive at the last trumpet. There's no guarantee the New World Order is going to send choppers looking for floating survivors; and even if they did, these are the last people you want to see anyway, as the Holy Spirit will have abandoned them forever and will go nowhere near anyone who has the mark. Be sure to attach to yourself a few bottles of fresh drinking water. And, some easy-to-reach air-bottles to provide you with breathable air as you're enjoying your wild underwater tour, or an oxygen tank like the scuba-divers use. No sight-seeing, rumor has it such events are to take place at night. Underwater flashlights are optional. You can design home-made breathing-tube apparatuses that you can tuck safely inside your clothing, testing the idea if you can is recommended. You'll get thrown around, oh yes, you will get tossed around, and you might even get ripped to shreds too. You could get stuck somewhere and never reach the surface. If one were to build a sphere-shaped safe-pod out of plastic bottles with a slit to squeeze through, the entire boat would have to be flexible enough not to break apart in the case of inevitable high-speed impacts. The laughable sight of such a boat-float becomes the answer to one's prayers when and if the actual moment were to actually arrive and you find yourself sitting inside your little mini-ark an approaching 1000-foot wave knocking on your front door. I think it might be better to be outdoors when it happens, but that's just my personal opinion. I'm sure surety of survival will vary differently from case to case. You may not live through it and this whole idea probably the dumbest suggestion ever made, but something is better than nothing, right? Expect the New World Order to forbid unsinkable boats. They are incapable of feeling shame concerning any foul action.

The Moses Project: wrap all bibles, commentaries, concordances, and literature in durable plastic baggings to keep them dry. Or place them in plastic containers wrapped with duct tape. Computers may be forbidden, but throw a few flash drives (USB sticks) in baggies just in case, with Bibles copied to them. Say a prayer that after a tsunami wipes out a location, may God send storms that will carry His Words to every shore. Exploring by boat or chopper any Bible-floating territory may become illegal, at risk of death for the rescuing of Bible literature from the waters. Never trust the New World Order.

These are the ideas my heart longed to express. There are indeed other things that can be done before the day comes when no man can work. If you pray about it, God may show you what to do and say. How about personal video-messages on flash drives? You can still speak the Gospel after you are gone from the earth. Don't worry about any evil foul-mouth-time-capsules that may be created; those sins will belong to them. And if they are dead, one of their final acts would be foolish acts of condemnation. Let he that is filthy be filthy.

God bless and protect those who would survive; may he give them strength and wisdom. May God's good hands receive the spirits of those who would perish. Should Sept 2015 not be filled with awful catastrophe, remember, Wormwood is still coming. Again, I am in no way saying any Meteors will fall in September of 2015. I am merely responding with thoughts provoked by such rumors. I hope what I've have to say may be helpful in some way.

I may not be able to respond to any comments about this post. Better you guys get to praying. Find oil for your lamps ye virgins. He is coming and his reward is with him. .

Any typographical errors are mine. I don't know if I'll be writing more such letters. Any lack of understanding should be prayed over.
